THE CHEROKEE TRAIL OF TEARS

CHAPTER - THIRTY
 (1838-1839)

Before long, long ago, there lived in the wildest part of the Great Smoky Mountains, a family who loved spinning tales of their ancestors of Ataga'hi - the Magic Lake which only the Cherokee knew of. No one ever saw the magic lake unless he had first fasted, prayed, kept an all-night vigil and waited for the magical purple vision.

'I shall never see the vision' Salatha was whining to her mother 'Only male children have this privilege' the Mother explained. 'You have other talents, such as cooking, mending, making leaf clothes. Soon, you shall produce others like yourself.'

'I shall never make a child, Mother. They cry, cry cry.'

'Only when you do not feed or love them or sing for them'. A decade later Salatha herself was with child. Her black hair fell to her waist and she had skin of fine porcelain. But, she had loved a white trader who came through the village. She had married him, but he did not return to claim her. She grieved and when the Cherokees were to be sent westward to the new homes, she refused to leave with her family. She must wait for John's return. She went each evening and dropped her prayers at the mountain where the sun set. She believed that the Great Spirit lifted her prayers to the heavens. Fall came on, the leaves took on their amber, rust and mauve coloring. Then they fell to the Mother Earth to decay and create the cycle of fertilizing the violets, wild rose, Cherokee rose and mountain laurel which would bloom in a few moons now.

November came and was especially cruel and biting. The storms were so violent that she dared not venture outside the hut. She made cactus candy to finish off her cornmeal flapjacks which were her steady diet for a month. The greens were all gone. There was no cow for milk. If John did not come soon, she would bear the small one alone. It was due now. A neighbor from across the mountain brought some beaver tail soup, some roasted deer meat and she ate it without a word.

'The men say we cannot hold out longer. We must leave the mountains. We have few blankets now. Another moon and we will be trapped until the rivers thaw.' Her friend said.

'I must wait for John. I know he will be back for the winter. But John did not find his way homeward.

She bore her child alone. And a white family took it after birth. They forced her into the wagon with other captives in mid December. They put a rope around her waist, dragged her, whipped her into obedience. She followed them because she thought they had her child. When she found out the cruel truth, that she was on her way to Oklahoma Territory, and her child was southward bound with the Traders Wagon Train, she died of a broken heart and starvation. But, before she went to the Great One, Salatha told passing traders to find her child in the Georgia mountains, tell her of her mother and her French-Indian father, John. She begged so desperately until they promised to find the child and never let her forget her heritage.

Little Martha Ann grew tall and strong, with bronzed hair, not the color of jet as her mothers, not the color of wheat as John but a deep hue of amber which shone in the setting sunlight. She was Indian in her soul; but, her actions were fine-honed by strict moral upbringing of her foster parents. She met and married a Mister Carroll, white trader who was killed when he was young.

Martha Ann loaded her wagons with all her world goods which she needed for the Alabama wilderness and left Georgia on the olde Three Notch Trail. She met and married a fairly good liver name, of William Hatcher who provided sumptuously for her and the small ones. He was twenty six years older than her, as was the custom then. She lived with him in Coffee county and Geneva County Alabama until his death. He was a railroad man and had lost his first wife in death - Caroline Barker. The family moved back and forth from Alabama to Georgia several times. On one of these trips A young Cherokee told of Salatha, the Indian woman, who had daughter, Martha Ann. He had heard the tale from his grandparents. Martha named one of her daughters Salatha for her blood mother who was Indian. Of John's family, it was told he was one -half Indian, one-half French. His French blood carried him on and on, on the rivers of North America where he blazed many a trail for the settlers. It was never known where and when he died. And, if he knew he had a beautiful, strong daughter and grandchildren.

The young Cherokee had studied well and he planned to teach in the fall term of their village school. One day he told the children of the fate of the Cherokee Indians being sealed by a small gold nugget found in a mountain stream.

'When the outside world learned of the gold in the creek beds, even the Chief Junaluska could not stop the hordes of thieves who came to dig and claim it for themselves. They burned out the Indians, shot them, and the Gold Rush to California or to Georgia gold fields had not begun yet. This was 1828....the date of two of our great grandparents' births.

.....And in 1832, 1836, 1839, 1841 our great, great grandparentsreceived lands in the Cherokee land lotteries..... taken from our Indian ancestors.....
JUSTICE, SWEET JUSTICE, YOU TRAVEL SO SLOW.....sings willie nelson

Mrs. Katie Steen
3406 Baltimore Ave.
Pascagoula, MS 39567

Dear Mrs. Steen,

I found your query in a recent issue of Journal of Jackson County, (Vol II #4) concerning the Danley surname.

My great grandmother was a Dannelly/Danley. I am hoping we may be able to help each other since I have not been able to locate any of her family. The information that I have is as follows:

Sarah Dannelly was born Dec 1826 in Alabama. She married James Forehand but I do not know when or where. By him she had three children; Catherine who married William Sugg, Julia who married ?White and 2nd Edward Pate, and George W. who married Louise Cypert. Sarah is found in the home with Charles Dannelly, George Dannelly, John Dannelly, and Elizabeth DAnnelly in the 1850 census. She has her children by James Forehand with her so it is assumed he is deceased or divorced. Sarah then married my gr. grandfather in Harrison Co. MS. and by him she had three sons, John W., Andrew J., and James B. (my grandfather) Cottrell. I believe the above DAnnellys to be her brothers and sister.

One of my uncles was named H. Danley Cottrell. From his name I first deducted that Danley/Dannelly was probably someones maiden name, or at least a family connection.

I have more on the Cottrell family but nothing on the Danleys, so if you are of this line we can exchange information. If you have found any of the above Danleys even if they aren't on your direct line, I would appreciate having the information. I will gladly pay for postage and copies.

Enclosed please find my SASE for your reply. I will be looking forward to hearing from you soon.

Sincerely,

Sam Cottrell

District 1 Supervisor Charles R. Moses had nothing but praise for the quality of Glen's work and his dedication and heavy equipment operator.

"We are lucky in this country to have men like Glen, who are deeply dedicated and who love the work they do," said Mrs. Moses. "And it shows in the quality of work he achieves."

At age 16, Glen discovered he loved mechanics, "it was just a good hobby," he said. "I just started my own workshop out of a garage in Pasadena, California, since 1971." Glen's first job in his adult life was as a County employee at the late Murphy Stokes' lumber supply company.

Born in Pasadena where his mother Lois still lives, He was one of 18 children that included three sets of twins. Glen has a twin sister named Glenda.

As a boy, he enjoyed hunting and fishing and playing baseball and basketball. As a child, Glen enjoyed each other's company outside.

Glen said he was close to his family before the accident, but he now feels even closer. He is amazed at the former even though this difficult time.

Glen's plans for the future include retirement and either starting his own business or joining up with his brothers who now run their own contracting business.

FRANK DANLEY BURNED WHEN GAS EXPLODES

C. A. Frazee's 39 foot shrimp trawler, the "Bernice W." was nothing but a badly burned hull after an explosion and fire Saturday afternoon, which took place near the mouth of the river.

Aboard the boat were Captain J. L. Downes and Frank Danley, 18, who had just taken on fifty gallons of gas, according to information received and were headed out to go shrimping. It is thought that gas in the bige ignited when the plugs were shorted out or tested as the boat got to the mouth of the river.

The explosion blew the cabin off and threw Danley down on the engine, it is said, partially stunning him, but he got to the deck and overboard, badly burned from head to foot. Downes was burned on the arms and legs. He is said to have received the burns in throwing over another drum containing gas. Downes pulled Danley back on board the fiercely burning boat and the pair were rescued by Mrs. Stone. Danley was rushed to the hospital for treatment. His burns were said to be very painful but not fatal.

The coast guard sent a patrol boat to put out the fire, and to tow the burning hull up the river. The engine is said to have been ruined. The boat is now about ready to make another trip, having been repaired this week by Mr. Frazee and a number of workmen, and equipped with a new engine.

The 50 gallons of gas were completely burned out.
